LARGEST CIRCULATION IN THE CITY.

MR. ORTH's instructions as Minister to Austria direct him, in case of an European war, to "observe a strict neutrality." If there is a man in the whole country that can observe a "strict neutrality" with grace and dignity it is Hon. Godlove S. Orth. He has practiced it with such success towards the antagonistic cliques of his party at home that the Government need feel no tears as to his ability in that respect.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL JEWELL has struck a vein of reform that has not proved satisfactory to politicians in several particulars, and now he proposes in advertising for mail contracts to be governed strictly by the law. This will deprive the party organs of about ninenthe of the "fat" from that quarter. Mr. Jewell, like Secretary Bristow, is showing too many signs of economy and od management to last long. He is kindling a flame that will make lively work for him before many months.

PRESIDENT GARRETT, of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, has just published a report in which some facts appear of great interest to Railroad managers. Notwithstanding the reduction of passenger rates the gross carnings of the road from this source shows an increase, during the month of March, of $103,774 over the corresponding month of 1874. This indicates a business activity far shead of last year, and also shows that cheap fares are more remunerative to the company than high prices. Many people will travel when they can do so at a comparatively moderate expenditure who would otherwise remain at home. It shows also that the popularity of the old pioneer line has in nowise abated, and that the independent course marked out by Mr. Garrett, and followed by the company, both meets with the endorsement of the public, and contributes to the interest of the road. It still further demonstrates that the business of Cincinnati and Baltimore is becoming more closely allied, and that our merchants are learning to more fully appreciate the importance and advantages of Baltimore as a commercial center.

THE INDUSTRIAL CONGRESS.

The Industrial Congress, at its session in Indianapolis this week, has adopted a long schedule of principles, some of which are of the first importance, some of no force in any direction, and one or two involving grave errors.

As to making worth "the standard of individual and national greatness," we explained that the other day in speakhis of "The Blessed Aristocracy of Wisdom."

As to securing to toilers more of the wealth they create, it can only be done by infusing justice into legislation, and the spirit of brotherhood into the popular heart.

We have frequently urged the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which the Congress demands.

The reservation of the public lands nopoly everywhere.

As to the abrogation of all laws that do not bear equally upon capital and labor, it would be clearer if some such laws were specified. There are many of

As to the abolition of the contract system on State, National and municipel works, we fear that the working while the plunder would be so great as to put an end to nearly all public works. In respect to the establishment of pub-He markets, so as to do away with middle men and speculators, there is no doubt that something might be done toward bringing the producer and the consumer into closer relationship; but to sbolish all middle men, would be to deprive the market of an immense quantity of provisions which farmers in the interior would not bring to market, and which would be lost to the city consumers, thus increasing prices. Everybody is, of course, in favor of a sheap system of transportation. Boston has resolved upon a new and cheap moute to the Northwest by way of Lake Ontario, and New York is alive with the necessity for cheap transportation.

Opposition to the importation of all servile races and to all subsidies to ships bringing them here is good.

The re-enactment and enforcement of the old apprentice system is demanded. Whether, after a system has died a natural death, it can be revived, is a

To abolish the system of contracting the labor of convicts would involve the necessity of working them by State sgents in such labors as they can per form or can be taught to perform. With honesty and good management, the State would make money by abolishing the contract system. To secure to both sexes equal pay for equal work is simply an impossibility, as supply and demand, reliability and capability will continue to govern the wages of the two sexes. Equal pay for equal work means the restriction of woman's work to certain feminine avocations.

Our readers know where we stand on the eight hour system, but the Congress averlooks the strongest reason for the fuitation.

As to the assessment of the expense of war upon the surplus wealth of the country, that would be a good plank if it demeans of doing it. Why not pay the cost our weakness, of our last war in this way? The Congrees means to "pay as you go" in war, which is sound.

The Congress protests ngainst invokng the aid of the military in cases of differences between bosses and their men. That is the policy pursued in China. The great employer is left to Another three days' rest from the fight it out with his men, and he generally wins.

The platform closes with the 3.65 interchangeable bond, which is the core of this Industrial Congress. We, not long since, fully discoursed on "The 360 Bond Party." On the whole these Industrial Congressmen are doing good at considerable cost. of time and money to themselves, and we will help so far as they are wise.

A CHORUS OF LOVE AND WINE.

Our learned and dignified friends, the Cincinnati Alumni of Yale College, seem to have felt decidedly luxurious in the late celebration of their eleventh annual reunion. Among the pieces sung by the Yale Glee Club was the "Launiger Horatius," with its chorus-

"Ubi sunt O pocula Duiciora melle, Rixe pax et oscula Rubentis puelle."

This chorus is reported as "pretty," and pretty it is, if we forget the old saw "pretty is that pretty does." A faithful translation of this "pretty" chorus is as follows:

O where are the pale-red wine-cups That are much sweeter than honey? O where is peace after conflict And kisses of the blushing girl?

This is, indeed, a "pretty" chorus for those whose convivial and sensual dispositions are not much moderated by either age or wisdom. The later Latins, from Horace to Ovid and Lucan, were very much given to songs of wine and vomen, and their modern namesakes. the French, Spanish and Italians, have greatly improved on their ancestors. The Greeks had their Sappho and Anacreon with their Symposium, which Socrates immortalized by the sublimest of his philosophical conversations, and drinking the whole company dead drunk while he continued to talk and drink till day-break, and then walked soberly over to the Agora to begin another day's talk with such as were always there to hear him. But Socrates and all the Greek philosophers, from Pythagoras down, gave themselves chiefly to the work of subduing the passions and of restraining the emotions within safe limits. "In what does a licentious man excel the most licentious wild beast?" was a common and a most serious question with them. The Latins were never philosophers enough to understand the true principle of self-government. Hence Livy did foul injustice to woman in saying-Initium turbandi omnia a fæmina ortum est-the beginning of all baseness springs from woman. On the contrary, the beginning of all baseness, so far as woman is concerned in it, is in man, who is ever inclined, when unrestrained and when he is of an attractive person and polished in manners, to inveigle woman into his totls by appeals to her softer nature, and thus enlist her in his schemes of avarice or ambition as well as of lust. In this way woman has generally been involved in nearly all the political movements of modern times in France, often in England, and sometimes in America. It is in such convivial celebrations as for actual settlers only is all right, but "pretty" choruses are sung, that the tenrestraining power of the understanding. The one in question was sung in Latin, as if it were more genteel to sing of love and wine in a dead language than in our own yernacular, in which the people would understand the song. It shows the desperation with which such follies cling to even the learned and high-minded citizens of the Republic of Letters. What difference between singing this chorus in Latin and singing in clear, articulate English:

"And since good wine is a rarity here We'll be jolly as gods on tobacco and beer." The difference is against the Latin chorus, because of the oscula rubentis puellos, and because tobacco and beer are comparatively harmless.

The French, with all their proclivity to the emotional as between the sexes. nevertheless have much rigid virtue among the peasantry, and most rigid maxims among those of high life who are determined to be virtuous. They have one which all young ladies should take to heart: "Fille qui prend se vend"-the girl that takes presents sells herself. So with greater certainty the girl like the

with greater certainty the girl like the one in our Yale chorus, and especially the married woman that gives and receives kisses, is lost.

We know that there is an almost irresistible fascination in such convivial scenes. Balzac says: It foudrait etre un Disupour echapper a la fascination dont pous entourent la nature et la societe—It is necessary to be a God to escape the fascination with which nature and society surround you.

gray loaden crowd, we began our journey homeward.

Tired out with my exertions, as soon as we started I nestled down amongst the soft furs in the sleigh, and, rocked by its easy motion, soon fell fast asleep.

How long I slept I know not, but when I awoke it was snowing fast, and the darkness so intense that we could not see a hand's breadth before us. I called to Eric, who was driving, and asked if all was well. To which the answer came back, "All well, but for God's sake try to keep awake."

So I aroused myself and sat up, knowing that sleep in that bitter night air aurround you.

It is time the reins were drawn upon progress in the direction of the emotions and of conviviality. The temptation is very great to enliven a feast with wine; and when the party is somewhat "elevated" (not drunk, ch, no!) it is very agreeable to sing of love and wine; but we submit whether citizens of the Republic of Letters should be found in such company. As to genuine social enjoyment, healthy men and women will not suffer for a chaste and lively zest, even on cold water. Tea and coffee are harmless and sufficiently intoxicating for virtuous people. The great scandal that is the distinguishing feature of our era is a warning that might well be heeded.

We beg pardon for having indulged in citations from other languages; but the "pretty" chorus sung by our Yale friends that would be a good plank if it destimulated our classical ambition to a

FOR DEAR LIFE.

We were keeping it right merrily at the old manor-house of Stor Aswan, the home of my childhood, as it had been that of my forelathers for many gener-

The pleasantest spot in all the world, I thought, and still think, that quaint Norwegian homestead, with its buff walls and birch-bark roof, which succeeding and birch-bark root, which succeeding summers had rendered verdant with an evergreen thatch of moss and lichens. Just now, however, this was not visible, for show lay thickly upon it as it had lain for weeks past; not only there, but

It was the hardest winter there had been for fity years—so the old lolks said—and they foretold its continuance for some weeks longer. Other signs were not wanting which, more plainly than aught else, denoted the unusual severity of the season.

The flocks of wild fowl, usually so shy and difficult of approach, came down from the upper meres, their accustomed from the upper meres, their accustomed haunts, and strove with the tame denizens of our own farmyard for a share in their midday meal. Hares and rabbits, impelied by hunger, forgot their nature, and stole up to our very doors, begging and stole up to our very doors, begging with their large dark eyes, in a piteous, dumb fashion, for relief. Herds of rein-deer, also, came south from Lapland, seeking more genial pastures; and it was rumored that less pleasant visitors had recently been seen and heard. The black pine-forests of Salten had again sent forth the grim, bloodthisty pack of legionaries who for ages had dweit unmolested in its dark fastnesses, and the ory of "Wol!!" was no longer, as heretofore, an empty sound.

All this, however, did not affect any of our party, who were all Norse men and maidens born, used to the cold, full of healtn and spirits. I, Ella Bicorn, daughter of the house, was the wildes of that mad circle who had assembled a Stor Aswan at Christmas-tide to do honor to my betrottal to Eric Jarl, the lover of my youth, ere long to be my hus-

As soon as the birch trees put forth their first green tassels in the early spring-time, I was to leave my old home for a new one, so now, surrounded by kinsfolk and neighbors, we were keeping this last anniversary of my spinsterhood in goodly fashion.

We revived many a by-gone pastime, and the vast hall at blor Aswan reschool once again to the shouts that greeted the incoming of a mighty yule-log, and rang with joyous laughter at the tricks and antics of morris-dancers and mummers.

80, in dancing, feasting and merry-making, the week sped, until a few hours more would see us all scattered in hours more would see us all scattered in various directions, to meet again we knew not when or where.

For the last day, therefore, we had re-served the chief pleasure, the crowning-point of all our enjoyment—a sleighing and skating-party to Stor Aswan, a mountain-encircled lake some ten miles further north, the same from which our homestered derived its quaint Runic homestead derived its quaint Runic name. This was to be our vail or greet-lag to the New Year—our welcome to the ncoming guest.

Brightly dawned the eventful morn-

All nature seemed rejoicing like our selves at the advent of another year, and one already so full of promise. Without, the sleigh-bells tinkled and chimed merrily, making the frosty air ring again as the gayly caparisoned horses pawed and shook their heads, impatient as their owners to be off.

At length we started, Eric and 1 as

But all things, even the pleasantest, must come to an end. So when the shades of evening began to fall heavily, merging earth, sky, and water into one gray leaden crowd, we began our jour-

Frightened, I said to Eric, "What, oh, what is that?" And the answer came is that?" And the answer came short and stern, "The Salten back, sh

We knew from the direction from whence it came that they were tracking us by scent; so now our last poor chance lay in the darkness of the night and our nearness to Stor

Eric still held the reins, and I cowered down at the bottom of the sleigh, and prayed more earnestly than I had ever yet done in my lite "for an increase of the snow-drift, or aught, even a miracle, it is also and a saye us."

if it might only save us."
On and on, for a time that seemed interminable, yet might in truth have been but a few moments. Then the storm ceased, the moon emerged from her shelter, and we saw halt a mile in our rear a ter, and we saw halt a mile in our rear a dark line coming swittly and steadily down upon us. In the middle of a white plain, with no nook or corner visible wherein we could take refuge, and still nearly a league from home, our case looked hopeless enough.

So our pursuers seemed to think, as they now caught sight of us for the first time, and litting their black muzzles.

time, and litting their black muzzles from the ground, gave vent to a howl of savage exultation.

I could have screamed, too, when I heard it, for fright was driving me half wild; it was so unutterably horrible to perish thus. But a glance at Eric, so calm and steadfast, gave me new courage. I felt that come what might, we should at least die together. Faster and faster we flew, like hunted

Faster and faster we flew, like hunted animals, Death behind us coming on apace. A few yards more, and he would claim us for his own. Already I could hear the rapid breathing of our foes, see their fierce eyes and white teeth glittering and gleaming in the moonlight. Prompted by Eric, I threw out the bearskin rug which protected me from the cold. For a moment they paused, smelt at it, then on with fresh fury after their old prey. One by one, cushions, wraps, old prey. One by one, cushions, wraps, all went over to the hungry pack, each gaining us an instant's priceless delay. As the last tell from my hand, the foremost wolf bounded for ard, just missing my arm, while his strong, cruel jaws met

Then Eric turned and looked at me—a long, loving giance—and began knotting the reins to the iron side of the drivingthe reins to the fron side of the driving-seat. Instinctively divining his pur-pose of giving his life to save mine, I sprang forward, and clinging to him frantically, whispered: "Dearest, remember we stand or fall together!"

A sudden thought, justified by our dire extremity, flashed through my brain—it was at best a forlorn hope. Quickly I bent over Eric, snatched the hunting-knife from his belt, and cut loose the nearest pony. With an almost human cry of pain the poor animal galloped off, with the ravenous pack after it. A few strides only, and it was surrounded, overpowered, down; and the last sounds we heard ere the welcome lights of Stor Aswan came in sight were our baffled Aswan came in sight were our baffled aswan came in sight were our onmed enemies growling and fighting over the remains of my gallant little steed. It was a cruel sucrifice, but necessity knows no law, and by it we were saved.

In after years, as we sat round the fire at "New Year's Eve," with the storm beating wildly, as now, against the case-ment, and the wintry twilight closing in. our children would ask to hear, "once more," the ofttold tale of the "Salten nounds," or our flight "for dear life,"

He came to Paris in the train of Marie Antoinette, when that fair and unfortunate Princess arrived in France on her marriage with the Dau-phin. At the age of eighty-four he contracted a marriage with a lady young enough to be his granddaughter, and ago M. de Waldeck offered to the overnment for sale a small but choice collection of pictures by the old mas-ters. The authorities thought that the price demanded for them was too high. they offered to compound the matter by settling upon him in exchange for his pictures an annual pension instead of a fixed sum of money to be paid down at once. A correspondent of the American Builder, writing from Cadiz, thus de-scribes an architectural novelty which he thinks would soon become popular if introduced in this country: It is a sort of glass box to hang outside of your win-dow and sit in. It is not a bay window at all, but a much cheaper and better contrivance to serve a similar purpose. The windows of the houses here are large, with French casements opening on hinges; outside there is a floor about two and a half feet in width, with its two and a half feet in width, with its-inner edge resting on the stone sill, its-outer edge being supported by a bracket. On three sides of this floor a light wood-en paneling rises about as high as the top of a chair, and above that, in the winter season, are glass sashes extend-lng to the roof of the little box, which is just a little higher than the top of the Tired out with my exertions, as soon as we started I nestled down amongst the soft furs in the sleigh, and, rocked by its easy motion, soon fell fast asleep.

How long I slept I know not, but when I awoke it was snowing fast, and the darkness so intense that we could not see a hand's breadth before us. I called to Eric, who was driving, and asked if all was well. To which the answer came back, "All well, but for God's sake try to keep awake."

So I aroused myself and sat up, knowing that sleep in that bitter night air might mean death. Of any other fear I had no thought, for my driver was skillful, whilst Thor and Odin, our two sturdy little mountain ponies, knew their way home almost unguided.

Suddenly, as I listened vainly for the echo of our companions' bells, I heard another sound come up with the windanter sound some up with the windanter sound come up with the windanter sound come up with the windanter sound some up with the windanter s or from the blazing tropical sun. As all large houses have a number of these boxes at the different windows, the effect upon the street is highly picturesque. The passer-by might easily lancy hinself an actor, walking down the stage of a very long narrow theater, for the amusement of several hundreds of dark-eyed spectators occupying the double row of proscenium boxes above.

The arguments have begun in the Mary Chaudler suit against Longworth's exe-cutors. The testimony closed last night. The plaintiff submitted a number of depositions to show that Alex Trimble, father of plaintil and heir of T.
